

New Ulm, MN—Today, Congressman Tim Walz visited Parker Hannifin in New Ulm to tour their facility and discuss ways to ensure our returning veterans are able to find good paying jobs here at home.

“It’s encouraging to see businesses like Parker Hannifin who are able to provide opportunity and prosperity right here in southern Minnesota,” said Walz. “These manufacturing jobs are good paying, middle class jobs. I am here today to see firsthand the work Parker Hannifin is doing and to discuss ways to ensure our veterans are finding good paying jobs they can be proud of.”

Parker Hannifin Corporation, founded in 1918, has over 110 employees in their New Ulm plant and is a world leader in diversified manufacturing of motion and control technologies. They service a wide variety of industries, including the industrial and aerospace markets.

This summer alone, Walz has had two bills signed into law aimed at supporting veterans’ employment.

In late July, the President signed Walz’s Veteran Skills to Jobs Act into law. This measure works to streamline the federal certification process, cutting through the bureaucratic red tape and making it easier for veterans to utilize skills acquired in the military for jobs at home.

Earlier this month, the President signed legislation introduced by Walz that will expand job protection for members of the Armed Forces
